

The book was found

Fire Island Modernist: Horace Gifford And The Architecture Of Seduction

Synopsis

As the 1960s became The Sixties, architect Horace Gifford executed a remarkable series of beach houses that transformed the terrain and culture of New York's Fire Island. Growing up on the beaches of Florida, Gifford forged a deep connection with coastal landscapes. Pairing this sensitivity with jazzy improvisations on modernist themes, he perfected a sustainable modernism in cedar and glass that was as attuned to natural landscapes as to our animal natures. Gifford's serene 1960s pavilions provided refuge from a hostile world, while his exuberant post-Stonewall, pre-AIDS masterpieces orchestrated bacchanals of liberation. Marilyn Monroe, Elizabeth Taylor and Montgomery Clift once spurned Hollywood limos for the rustic charm of Fire Island's boardwalks. Truman Capote wrote Breakfast at Tiffany's here. Diane von Furstenberg showed off her latest wrap dresses to an audience that included Halston, Giorgio Sant'Angelo, Calvin Klein and Geoffrey Beene. Today, such a roster evokes the aloof, gated compounds of the Hamptons or Malibu. But these celebrities lived in modestly scaled homes alongside middle-class vacationers, all with equal access to Fire Island's natural beauty. Blending cultural and architectural history, Fire Island Modernist ponders a fascinating era through an overlooked architect whose life, work and colorful milieu trace the operatic arc of a lost generation, and still resonate with artistic and historical import.

Book Information

Hardcover: 204 pages

Publisher: Metropolis Books/Gordon de Vries Studio; First Edition edition (May 30, 2013)

Language: English

ISBN-10: 1938922093

ISBN-13: 978-1938922091

Product Dimensions: 9.4 x 1 x 12.1 inches

Shipping Weight: 3.4 pounds (View shipping rates and policies)

Average Customer Review: 4.7 out of 5 stars 36 customer reviews

Best Sellers Rank: #122,627 in Books (See Top 100 in Books) #27 in Books > Arts &

Photography > Architecture > Regional #42 in Books > Arts & Photography > Architecture >

Individual Architects & Firms #97 in Books > Arts & Photography > Architecture > Buildings >

Residential

Customer Reviews

Rawlins book, full of gorgeous photographs drawings, illustrates Kahn's influence on Gifford. His understanding of servant and served spaces, and monumental form is beautifully documented. Salinger asked if we could grow-up, retain our optimism and not be considered naive. Given that Rawlin's book is as much social commentary as it is biography and architectural history, it asks questions regarding culture while explaining the cultural influences on the architect: can you understand and accept gay culture? Can you see the unique beauty of this culture? Can you see aspirations in the architecture? Can you do it while it evolves, on its own terms? Give this beautiful and thoughtful book, I remain optimistic. (Alastair Gordon Mod) Every once in a great while, there is a book that is immediately hailed as so essential one wonders not so much why it was never done before but how we managed to get by without it. If that sounds overly effusive, buy, borrow or steal Fire Island Modernist: Horace Gifford and the Architecture of Seduction and, after reading -- no, devouring it -- get back to me. (Steve Weinstein Edge) Fire Island Modernist traces 1960s gay culture through art and architecture. (Leigh Paterson BBC NEWS) Every once in a great while, there is a book that is immediately hailed as so essential one wonders not so much why it has never done before but how we managed to get by without it. If that sounds overly effusive, buy, borrow or steal Fire Island Modernist: Horace Gifford and the Architecture of Seduction and, after reading - no devouring it - get back to me. (Steve Weinstein Edge on the Net) Horace Gifford, the designer of a series of modest but highly influential beach houses in Fire Island Pines, a small town on a spit of land some 50 miles east of New York City, was known for his irreverence... Gifford's houses... were emblematic of a time when even clients as rich as Calvin Klein were weekend minimalists (Fred Bernstein Wallpaper*) Though the thin spit of land off Long Island's coast has long been known as a summer getaway, Fire Island became a truly notable retreat when Horace Gifford brought his serene sensibility to its sandy shores in the '60s. Pictures of the Florida-born architect's modern cedar-and-glass bungalows support an engaging narrative worthy of the site's distinctively colorful heritage. (Jordan Kushins Surface Magazine) The first-ever account of the late Horace Gifford's architectural legacy on the infamous New York pleasure retreat reminds us that history is only ever what we make of it, as personal as it may be, or in this case, queer. Remembered by some for his impulsive ways, irresistible surfer looks, and porn-star appendage, Gifford's largely forgotten work reemerges as a serious voice in tune with post-war grandees like Louis Kahn and Paul Rudolph. Lovers of queer history will thank author Christopher Rawlins for detailing Gifford's beach homes on the barrier island alongside a social narrative gilded by names like Calvin Klein, Oscar Wilde, and the Mattachine Society. As the sleepy enclave does sex, drugs, and disco, Rawlins covers all ground, from political punches to Gifford's liberated maxi-couches and make-out lofts. It's a sincere retelling which makes a courageous monument of an archive rescued from the rear of a suburban garage. (Pierre Alexandre De Looz Pin-Up) Fire Island wouldn't be the idyllic haven we know today if it weren't for Horace Gifford, a young, often overlooked architect from Florida who designed 78 stunning beach houses off its boardwalks between 1961 and 1980. In Fire Island Modernist: Horace Gifford and the Architecture of Seduction (Metropolis Books), a new monograph bursting with inspiring drawings and vintage photographs, author and architect Christopher Rawlins remembers this precocious (and handsome) talent who turned the south shores of Long Island into a modernist's dream. (Andrew Belonsky OUT Magazine) Throughout the late '60s and into the '70s, men like Mr. Gifford, Harry Bates, Earl Combs, Arthur Erickson, Andrew Geller and James McCloud — not all of them gay — were kept busy erecting elegant, stark structures on this austere beautiful and fragile barrier island, houses of naturally weathering cedar, redwood pavilions set back from the boardwalk, their broad windows serving as prosceniums across which backlit players in Speedos, or else nothing, played out a specific variant of the theater of late 20th century gay life. (Guy Trebay The New York Times, Styles Section) In those days, the Pines was seen as an untainted address, observes Christopher Rawlins in Fire Island Modernist, his new book about Horace Gifford, who designed just about one in ten houses there. Gifford was a strapping idealist, and his houses were communal, economical, and exhibitionistic: the bedrooms small, the central areas open, with everything wooden or glass (he essentially treated all surfaces like floors, Rawlins writes). (Carl Swanson New York Magazine) In "Fire Island Modernist: Horace Gifford and the Architecture of Seduction," Christopher Rawlins presents an insightful and gorgeously illustrated account of the luminous midcentury modern vacation homes that architect Horace Gifford built during the 1960s and '70s in Fire Island's gay enclaves. But this beautiful book, published in May by Metropolis Books and Gordon de Vries Studio, contains more than blueprints: Rawlins fluidly merges a cultural history of New York's gay community with Gifford's personal biography and work, showing how his seductive designs were deeply connected to the newfound freedoms he and his clients enjoyed out on the beach. (Bryan Lowder Slate) Both a cultural history and an architectural mediation, Fire Island Modernist captures the look, feel and sensation of gay society in the 1960s and '70s that flourished on the sandy shores and shifting dunes of the 31-mile barrier island of its title... Rawlins's clear graceful prose has just the right tone and style for his subject, and his selection of photographs, drawings, and illustrations brings Gifford's times back to life... Photographs of handsome young men cavorting on the beach and striking fashionable poses by the pool add to the book's glamorous ambience. As Alistair Gordon states in his foreword, Gifford's houses 'expressed the longings of a culture that had transformed Fire Island into a free-fire zone of social and sexual discovery. (Clifford Pearson Architectural Record)

I met Horace Gifford at a cocktail party in New York City Sept. 1970. He came to the party with a friend of mine who was a landscape architect who anxiously introduced me to Horace, saying "now you two are going to become great friends" and we did. More than 20 years later I was introduced to Christopher Rawlins at a dinner party given by two architects who thought that Christopher and I should meet since I had worked both full time and part time with Horace for twenty years and Christopher had plans to write a biography of Horace and his work. I was very taken with Christopher's deep interest in Horace's work at The Pines on Fire Island. Walking home after dinner I knew that this young man was definitely going to write an excellent book about Horace Gifford and his work. The book Christopher Rawlins wrote goes deeper into Horace Gifford's life, his Architecture, the history of Fire Island and life style of residents of The Pines community than I had imagined him doing. But, by doing this complicated, connecting, informative biography and history book of a particular time and place the reading is swift and a joy of learning; and, the reader will be looking forward to a second and third reading.

As an interior designer, I notice detail. As a young man visiting Fire Island, I was struck by a number of the houses I saw, and each time I asked who had designed it, the same name came up -- Horace Gifford. Mr. Rawlins' book has captured, in a unique and complete way, a time past, a time of fond memories, coupled with a sense of loss that is very tangible. There are books about architects and books about architecture, but seldom have I read such an evocative combination of thoughtful research, which captures both the art of Mr. Gifford, and at the same time captures the color of the man, the moment, the time, and the place. Reading it, you are swept up in the dialogue, and perhaps, because I have been there, I was brushed by the breeze, smelled the cedar, and felt the sand under my feet, not to mention the visceral recollection of friends, both present and past. Anyone who cares about the richness of experience and the dynamic of living it needs to read Mr. Rawlin's book -- and to quote Thoreau ; "The world is but a canvas to our imagination."

I have had a home on Fire island for the past 35 years---and my dream, never realized, was to have it designed by Horace Gifford. His simple but elegant homes stand out for their beauty and attention to detail---and especially to their location. I don't think any architect had a better understanding of the beach and the particular site he was building on....as he said "The site suggests what the house wants to be as a form in space." He took full advantage of the sea, the sky, the pine tree settings while always respecting the fragile environment---and often with a small building lot...since land on Fire Island is so limited and precious. His homes, largely of glass and cedar and often built around interior sun decks, are really sculptures. He died much too young and never received enough acclaim for his incredible talent. I waited so long for the beautiful volume to be published and I treasure my copy.

I have studied the Case Study House program extensively. However, I was unaware of the "East Coast" aesthetic and am therefore very thankful for this treatise on the works of Horace Gifford and the other architects who were influenced by the modernist movement. A great beginning for anyone studying Mid-Century Modern design and how specific architects were influenced and thereafter offered their own style to this architectural oeuvre. Also, this is a must for anyone interested in Fire Island and its association with gay history! HIGHLY RECOMMENDED!

I'm not one of those who believes that Gay Men are born naturally artistic. But I do believe that, behind every significant artistic movement, there is at least one Gay Man pushing things forward. For modernism as expressed in residential architecture, Horace Gifford was that man. His remaining structures ought to be protected as national treasures.

I and two friends in the 70's rented for three seasons one of Horace's houses he designed. The Evans DePass house. I also had the privilege of knowing Horace on a "hello" basis. A very nice man. And if I might add underrated for his concepts. But I think this book will bring to light how great Horace was.

I stumbled across this book on Amazon recently and ordered it not really knowing what I would be getting into. Upon its arrival, I glanced at the book and was immediately intrigued with the photographs of not only the architecture but the decidedly social setting of the houses designed by Horace Gifford. I sat down that night and read the book cover to cover. It is a fairly easy read, and Gifford's clients came to life in the writing of author Rawlins. And what lives these men lived!!!! It is amazing how the architecture created by Gifford responded so completely with the changing times of society of the 1960's and 1970's. These are not large, boring mega-mansions of today, but small incredibly powerful designs set within the site and environment, not wanting to overpower but to meld in. As an architect, I enjoyed the many photographs and drawings of the houses. As a gay man, I was entranced by the stories of the client relationships and the social history of Fire Island. Rawlins has written a "must read" for summer vacation 2013.

This book is amazing. The history of FIP, LGBT and Horace Gifford was absolutely stunning. Spent a few hours reading every word and drooling over the interiors of these amazing homes. I have been wanting to treat myself and I sure did. Great price and same day delivery.

Download to continue reading...

Fire Island Modernist: Horace Gifford and the Architecture of Seduction
Fire Encyclopedia: Kindle Fire Manual for the latest generation of Kindle E-Readers and Fire Tablets, Kindle Voyage, Kindle Paperwhite, Fire HD 6, Fire HD 8, Fire HD 10, and Fire HDX 8.9
Modernist Cooking Made Easy: The Whipping Siphon: Create Unique Taste Sensations By Combining Modernist Techniques With This Versatile Tool
Sacred Seduction: A Guidebook, Memoir and Tribute to The Art Of Seduction
All-new Fire HD8 and Fire HD10 Tips, Tricks, and Traps: A comprehensive user guide to the new Fire HD8 and Fire HD10 tablets
Fire Stick: The Ultimate Fire Stick User Guide - Learn How To Start Using Fire Stick, Plus Little-Known Tips And Tricks! (Streaming ... TV Stick User Guide, How To Use Fire Stick)
Fire TV: Fire Stick: The Ultimate User Guide to Fire Stick To TV, Movies, Apps, Games & Much More (how to use Fire Stick, streaming, tips ... (User guides, internet, free movie Book 2)
How to Install Kodi on Fire Stick: Install Kodi on Fire Stick: Step-By-Step Instructions with Screen Shots! (2017 Kodi User Guide, fire tv stick, kodi book, kodi fire tv stick, kodi stick)
Bridging Deep South Rivers: The Life and Legend of Horace King
Horace King: From Slave, to Master Builder and Legislator (An African American Experience Project)
Ornament is Crime: Modernist Architecture
Goat Rocks, Norse Peak and William O. Douglas Wilderness Areas [Gifford Pinchot, Mt. Baker-Snoqualmie, and Okanogan-Wenatchee National Forests] (National Geographic Trails Illustrated Map)
Christianity and Classical Culture: The Metamorphosis of Natural Theology in the Christian Encounter with Hellenism (Gifford Lectures Series)
Religious Pluralism and Interreligious Theology: The Gifford Lectures -- An Extended Edition
Autonomy and Trust in Bioethics (Gifford Lectures)
The Mystery of Being, Volume I: Reflection and Mystery (Gifford Lectures, 1949-1950)
Mount St. Helens, Mount Adams [Gifford Pinchot National Forest] (National Geographic Trails Illustrated Map)
We All Scream: The Fall of the Gifford's Ice Cream Empire inside: Architecture and Design: A guide to the practice of architecture (what they don't teach you in architecture school)
Fire Encyclopedia: Fire TV and Fire Stick Manual (First Edition).

Contact Us

DMCA

Privacy

FAQ & Help