Curt Burdick, a veteran paddler, grew up in Michigan and today lives with his wife and their two sons in Daphne, Alabama. He is a programmer in the software industry. Joe Cuhaj, a former radio broadcaster, is the author of Hike America: Alabama. He is a seasoned outdoorsman living in Daphne, Alabama, with his wife and daughter.

Fantastic for those starting out paddling in Alabama or looking to expand beyond their immediate area. As the authors note, Alabama is blessed with many, many miles of rivers and creeks and a book outlining all of them would be impossible to make without expanding into several volumes. I also like the hotel, restaurant, and area attraction suggestions incurred with each trip description. Overall, this book is much better than Alabama Canoe Rides and Float Trips by Foshee, which was written before several dams were constructed. No fault to Foshee. It's just that rivers and creeks and lakes have changed since he wrote his book.

The book was a bit dated. Some of the information was several years old. Otherwise the book arrived without any problems. Everything was acceptable.

This is a Great book. It is very detailed and informative. If you are planning a Canoe or Kayak trip in Alabama this book is a must.

I have several good paddling guide books, but, unfortunately, this isn't one of them. It looks like what the authors did was find the shortest possible trips on rivers scattered around the state and wrote those up. Many of the rivers they "covered" have several good day trips, but you only hear about the shortest one with this book. This lets them say that they have a book on the whole state. Florida has several good guide books that are current. If you want to paddle in Alabama, save your money and search the web instead. I'd definitely like my money back on this one.

First of all, I've lived in Alabama for the last fifty year's. I've been paddling for the last forty. I've paddle rivers, streams, and creeks all over the south. After looking at a copy of this book, I have to say what a waste of paper, ink, and time. Not to forget money if you bought it. I came to to see what was here. Not much on paddling Alabama. One other book, Alabama canoe and float trips which I have not seen. If your just starting to paddle, join a local club. Ask people that have experience. And remember, "You may go a lifetime without a scratch or you might die your first trip, get some help!" Second, this reviewer bukhtan, is an idiot. I'll bet money they've never been in the state of Alabama, let alone paddled one of its rivers. Look at the number of reviews they've written. How can lets someone write this many canned reviews? I feel sorry for bukhtan, he's like a mushroom, kept in the dark and you know the rest.

The authors describe twenty-nine trips in the present state of Alabama, from saltwater trips by Dauphin Island, forays in the great delta of the Mobile and Tensaw rivers, still half intact, amazingly, various small rivers in the southern half of the state (Escatawpa, Magnolia, Hurricane Creek, Perdido, Styx, Big Escambia Creek, Choctawhatchee, Conecuh, Pea, Sepulga & Yellow), central rivers such as the Little Cahaba (the one toward Centerville), Hatchett "River" (we called it "creek" back in the day, though it is a big one), its onetime tributary Weogufka, the bit of the Coosa that's been left running by Alabama Power, a small bit of the Tallapoosa, and bits and pieces of the Locust Fork of the Black Warrior River, the Mulberry Fork of the BWR, Bear and Borden Creeks, the Flint, the Sipsey Fork of the BWR (not the Sipsey over by Mississippi) and the recently imperiled Terrapin Creek (I didn't know about that one). No Cahaba, no Little River (in May's Gulf), no Tombigbee (eliminated by the Tenn-Tom, of course), but you can't have everything, especially when Falcon Guides pretty well standardizes the length of their books. The descriptions are as detailed as they have to be, with good maps, lists of outfitters etc, and there are quite a lot of references, including websites. The authors end their general introduction with a discussion "So who really owns the rivers?". I remember an old bird a couple of miles below US 280 on the Cahaba, now surely howling in She'ol, who used to run out screaming when he saw canoeists preparing to portage the three-foot dam on the river beside his (at that time) country residence. The ranting and raving didn't cease when the interlopers tried portaging along the near vertical opposite bank. They were trespassing when they were on the river itself, he said. -How's that? -This river isn't navigable! -Why not? (Alabama law held that waterways had to be "navigable" to be public.) -I've dammed it up myself! Anybody who grew up in the "state of Alabama" remembers encountering this kind of stuff. The authors remark, offhandedly, that "some ... would just as soon take a shot at a passing canoe". In fact, when I was making my getaway from the Heart of Dixie, canoeists on the Locust Fork were occasionally the target of rifle and shotgun blasts. Did the natives believe the navigators were opponents of the local porkbarrel dam project, of stripmining or something else that paid? I couldn't tell you. Who knows whether these local patriots were the ones who burned down a couple of covered bridges thereabouts, or tried to dynamite a natural bridge up on Town Creek, or were involved in any of the rest of the idiocy and skullduggery so characteristic of the rural areas of this benighted state? So, if you're planning to canoe on the beautiful creeks and rivers of this once very beautiful stretch of land, wrecked and befouled by the political entity called "Alabama", be prepared for some pretty savage stuff.
