Karen Katz whips together another fun, colorful lift-the-flap adventure, in the form of a wee home-improvement project between a father and child. Displaying the same cheerful delivery and bright artwork that Katz used in Where Is Baby's Belly Button? and Toes, Ears, and Nose!, Daddy and Me tells its tale with a simple setup and sturdy flaps to lift on each two-page spread: "I'm helping Dad make something special. First we saw the wood. Where is Daddy's saw?" Two easy-to-grab flaps open to reveal that Daddy's saw is "In the... closet." Pencils, nails, screwdrivers, and a paintbrush are likewise hiding out around the shop, and it's up to Daddy's cherubic, gender-indeterminate little helper to track them down--with some help from the reader, of course, lifting up work gloves, a tool box lid, some paint cans, and a newspaper. We finally find out what project Daddy had planned (which also explains why a cute chestnut puppy has been helping the helper all along): "At last we are finished. We made a doghouse for Henry! But where is Henry?" Readers get to lift one more flap to find out. (Baby to preschool) --Paul Hughes

Daddy loved this as a fathers day gift. Cute short story. My son loves the pictures and finding things under the flaps.

Most adorable! Love to see Daddy books, yay!!!! Great illustrations. Father's Day gift for my son who just had his first child.

Cute book. Putting in a Fathers Day gift basket.

So cute and well made cute book!

Though not as charming as many of the other Karen Katz books, this earlier title is still a great little story for infants and toddlers. Baby and Daddy build a doghouse together, finding parts and tools hidden under flaps, and working as a team.

Excellent lift-the-flap kids book. I gave lots of these books to my nephew's kids as gifts. My nephew's wife is VERY picky as to what she likes - I think she wasn't sure what she thought of these books at first, but her son chooses these books to be read time and time again. I think she likes the sturdiness of the board books. I loved lift-the-flap when I was a kid - I'm glad my grand(?) -nephew enjoys them too - they make reading books (and learning from them) fun!

The flaps of the book are okay, but the story isn't a favorite with me or my son. It doesn't make a lot of sense to someone who builds all the time - when my husband reads it, he explains to my son why you wouldn't use that particular tool or what a better way to build the dog house would be!!
