This amazing book combines today's successes with past ones beautifully.

Informative, engaging book about 16 girls and women who struggled for social and political justice around the world. Each chapter tells the story of one activist who passionately fought for equal rights at great personal cost. Causes included the rights of girls and women for equal access to the same liberties as men (to vote, for birth control, for education, for safety), to stop global crony capitalism, to support worker's rights and many other causes. Most of the activists paid dearly for their political work and were jailed, bullied, shot at and endured the deaths of family members and great financial hardship. While each story is informative, and at times compelling, the style of the narratives became repetitious and fell a bit flat. I was interested in the criticisms made by anti-lynching freedom fighters towards white suffragettes whose racism led them to make decisions that were damaging for the anti-lynching and civil rights cause. I would have liked to learn more about this may have made a more dynamic, complex presentation. However, in general, I was impressed by the bravery of these women and the skill of the author in showing us how activism changes the world for all of us. Thank you to Netgalley for allowing me to review this book for an honest opinion.

This is an interesting collection of short biographies of women activists who made a difference in the world in the past 100 years. The biographies are written for teens, but are interesting enough that anyone should find them informative and good reads. I received this book free to review from Netgalley and I highly recommend it.

Very informative book with stories about 16 women who not only survived adversity but went forward to help make changes in our world!

I haven't read the book but I noticed that Margaret Sanger is featured and this is disturbing. She may have been an activist for birth control but she was also a racist with a goal of eliminating blacks through abortion. She was also the founder of Planned Parenthood.
