Simon Swaffield is Professor of Landscape Architecture at Lincoln University, New Zealand.

I'm a civil engineer major and took a landscape architecture class for General Ed and I loved my class! This book is kind of thick and a more philosophical read, but there's no way I'm getting rid of it. Came in great condition too.

Loved it

Fast shipping, book arrived as described.

A selection of essays originally published during the twentieth century. A must read for those wanting to join the modernist II movement.

Perfect!

Don't try to read in one sitting. It is a little deep for those of us who didn't major in philosophy or literature.

Needed the book for class, came brand new and in a short time. The essays are written by people who like to hear themselves talk, they are deep thinkers and can be somewhat hard to understand. At least the essays are short though.

I am a senior in Landscape Architecture and we have read several of the sections of this book in my design theory class before I decided to purchase. Excellent writing and theory, but as the previous reviewer said, It deal with complex issues and is not a light read. Must buy for any design professional or student.
