

The book was found

You Throw Like A Girl (mix)

Synopsis

Miss Congeniality meets Sheâ™s the Man in this hilarious MIX novel about a girl torn between competing in a beauty pageant and playing on the boyâ™s baseball team. Gabbyâ™s summer vacation isnâ™t shaping up to be that great. Her dad was just deployed overseas, and Gabby is staying at her grandmotherâ™s house with her mom and baby sister until he returns. The one bright spot is that Gabby plans to sign up for the local softball leagueâ™her greatest love and a passion she shares with her Dad who was a pitcher in college. But when Gabby goes to sign up for the summer league, she discovers that there wasnâ™t enough interest to justify a girlâ™s team this year. And to top it off, a horrible miscommunication ends with Gabby signed up to participate in the Miss Popcorn Festivalâ™the annual pageant that Gabbyâ™s mom dominated when she was younger. Besides not having any interest in the pageant life, Gabby made a promise to her dad that she would play softball for the summer. Since her pitching skills rival any boy her age, Gabby creates a master plan: disguise herself as a boy and sign up for the boyâ™s baseball team insteadâ™and try to win the pageant to make Mom happy. Can Gabby juggle perfecting her pageant walk and perfecting her fastball? Or will this plan strike out?

Book Information

Lexile Measure: 770 (What's this?)

Series: mix

Paperback: 272 pages

Publisher: Aladdin (February 14, 2017)

Language: English

ISBN-10: 1481459848

ISBN-13: 978-1481459846

Product Dimensions: 5.1 x 0.9 x 7.6 inches

Shipping Weight: 5.6 ounces (View shipping rates and policies)

Average Customer Review: 4.8 out of 5 stars 7 customer reviews

Best Sellers Rank: #76,463 in Books (See Top 100 in Books) #51 in Books > Children's Books > Growing Up & Facts of Life > Family Life > Moving #104 in Books > Children's Books > Sports & Outdoors > Baseball #344 in Books > Children's Books > Growing Up & Facts of Life > Family Life > New Experiences

Age Range: 9 - 13 years

Grade Level: 4 - 8

Customer Reviews

One of Rachele Alpine's first jobs was at a library, but it didn't last long, because all she did was hide in the third-floor stacks and read. Now she's a little more careful about when and where she indulges her reading habit. Rachele is a high school English teacher by day, a wife and mother by night, and a writer during any time she can find in between. She lives in Cleveland, Ohio where she writes middle grade and young adult novels. Visit her at RacheleAlpine.com.

You Throw Like a Girl IT WAS THE FIRST DAY of summer vacation. Mom called it the Summer of Girls. My nine-month-old sister, Ava, called it, "Wah, Wah, WAAAAAH!" And I called it the Summer without Dad. But the truth was, no matter what you called it, this summer was going to stink. How could it not, when I was trapped in a car, eight hours into a journey that was taking me far away from my friends, and a week ago we said good-bye to Dad as he started a year deployment overseas in a place thousands of miles away? Save ME PLZ!!!! I texted to my best friend, Maddie. Come back PLZ!!!! she texted back, and I wished I could. We crossed the Indiana border and passed a giant sign that proclaimed Ohio THE HEART OF IT ALL. Mom beeped the horn three times. I sunk down in my seat to avoid the confused looks of the people in the cars next to us. "Please, stop that," I told her, but my protests didn't matter. Mom beeped every time we entered a new state. "How else am I going to announce to everyone that we've arrived?" she asked. Ava thought it was hilarious, cooing each time Mom laid on the horn. I, on the other hand, wanted to disappear, from embarrassment. Especially when we'd crossed from Illinois into Indiana and Mom's horn had startled the guy to the right of us. He'd shaken his fist and mouthed some words Ava was definitely not old enough to learn. "Are we there yet?" I asked for what was probably the fiftieth time that day. "Not much longer," Mom said, which was the reply she gave me every time I checked. I had a feeling that if I had asked her the same question shortly after we'd pulled out of the driveway, she would've still said that it wouldn't take much longer. I opened my mouth and let out a huge yawn. "This drive stinks," I announced, but no one bothered to answer, so I rested my head against the window and watched the world fly by. We usually took a plane to Grandma's house, but this year we took the minivan. Mom thought driving would be an adventure that would help us bond. "Picture it," she'd said when she'd told me the news. I'd been lying on a folding chair in the backyard, soaking in the first day of warm weather and dreaming about the last day of sixth grade. "It'll be the three of us girls and the open road. We'll have so much fun!" I'd told Mom I'd give it a chance, but I wasn't convinced this would be as fun as she believed it would be. So far my summer had consisted of nothing but endless fields, with the occasional farmhouse and cows. I was so bored that at one point I tried to count the yellow lines on the road, which didn't work, because Mom always went over the speed limit and it was all a blur. We drove on, and another half hour ticked by, and then fifteen more minutes. I watched the world slip past outside the car window as we moved further and further away from our house and closer and closer to Grandma's. Mom pulled off the highway, and we began to take side roads. I was one more winding road away from getting carsick when Mom pointed out the window. "Gabby, look, we're getting close. There's LaMarca's Farm." One of my favorite sites to spot on the way to Grandma's house came into view. It was a two-story-tall corn statue that stood at the entrance of the biggest farm in the area. I'd never been so happy to see a giant ear of corn. It meant we'd made it. Buildings and streets began to look familiar, and I felt a tiny flutter of excitement. We'd visited enough times in the summer that it kind of felt like my home away from home. "Coneheads has orange swirl ice cream today!" Mom announced as we passed a small building painted with rainbow colors whose sign had a face with a cone on the top of its head like a hat. It was one of our favorite places to go when we visited Grandma, and who could blame us? Their chocolate chunk mint ice cream was the best I'd ever had. We drove through the tiny downtown with a bunch of stores and restaurants, and passed under a giant banner stretched across the street that advertised the Corn Festival. It had a countdown box announcing that there were sixty-one days until the annual event. Mom and Dad always made sure to time our yearly visit so we could go. It was a weeklong celebration with games, carnival food, rides, concerts, a beauty pageant, and most important, the championship game for the summer league softball and baseball teams. It was such a fun week. Everyone was in a great mood as they celebrated their biggest crop. "Corn! Mom said this year would be even more of a big deal because it was the fiftieth anniversary of the festival, so the town planned to waste no expense to make it as grand as possible. We left the main stretch of town and passed the recreation center, which was full of kids at the pool. But I didn't care about the pool; it was the baseball field I was interested in. I watched a group of boys around my age playing a game, and I imagined myself on the pitcher's mound. Mom had promised me I could join the softball team here, and I couldn't wait to get out on the field and throw the ball around. But my good feelings evaporated quickly as I thought about how Dad wouldn't be able to watch me play this summer. The car turned down Grandma's street, and the empty feeling deep in my stomach became worse. Usually when we turned onto her street with the rental car my parents would get at the airport, Dad would drive super-slowly on purpose, which made me crazy, because all I wanted to do was race out of the car and jump into her pool. It was the best part of her house. I'd begged Mom and Dad for years to get a pool like Grandma has, but there was no budging them, so I made sure to get lots of swimming time in when we visited. Today was different, though. Mom didn't drive slowly. She didn't remember the joke Dad would play, and for the millionth time that day, I wished he was here. I couldn't help thinking about him. How could I not? Mom said that I needed to keep my mind busy with other things so I wouldn't miss him as much, but that wasn't working at all. For either of us. I'd caught her a few times staring off into space with a sad look in her eyes, and I was pretty sure it was because she was thinking about Dad. "I know this is hard on you; it's hard on all of us," she'd say. "But this summer will be good. I need help with Ava, and you'll be so busy making new friends that you won't even notice your dad is away." But she was wrong. I'd never forget that he wasn't with us. It'd been a week since we'd said good-bye to him, and we hadn't heard from him yet. Mom said that as soon as he was able to, he'd contact us, but waiting was the worst ever, because I had no idea if he was okay or not. I didn't say any of this to Mom, though, because I needed to be strong for her so she wouldn't get upset. Dad had told me to try to do that, and I wanted to make him proud. I wiped my hands on my shorts and gripped the handle of the door. Even if Dad wasn't here, I couldn't break tradition. I was ready to get out of this car and jump into the pool. It was a ritual Dad and I had followed for years. We'd wear our bathing suits under our clothes, and before we even brought our bags into the house, the two of us would go for our first swim together. Mom and Grandma would sit on the porch with glasses of lemonade full of ice cubes, while Dad and I raced each other in the pool. We'd swim until our fingers were wrinkled like raisins and Mom told Dad to get out so he could start grilling. Even then, the two of us would eat at the picnic table in our bathing suits, not showering and changing until the sun had dipped deep down behind the trees. Mom beeped the horn one last time as she pulled into the driveway, and I was out the door before she even turned off the car. "I'll bring my suitcase in later," I shouted, and ran away before she could protest. I pulled my shirt off over my head and wadded it into a ball. I ran around the side of the house, wiggled out of my shorts, and threw them onto the back deck. I held my hands out and spun around, breathing in the familiar scent of fresh-cut grass and chlorine from the pool. As much as I didn't want to come here for the whole summer, it felt good to be back, and maybe, just maybe, things wouldn't be so bad. I thought about what Dad would want me to do, took a few steps backward, and then ran forward and, with a giant cheer, did a cannonball into the pool. Summer had officially begun! When I surfaced, I swam to the other side by myself, pretending Dad was right alongside me.

You Throw Like a Girl tackles the pressure young girls feel to fit a certain "type." Gabby has a mom who was a former beauty queen and a dad who was a local baseball legend. Gabby gravitated toward her father's pastime, taking up softball. But when her dad leaves the country and she heads to her grandmother's house for the summer, she finds herself pushed into the pageant world while also pretending to be a boy to get onto the only youth softball team in town. I had so much fun reading this book, but I also think it has a great message for young girls who might not be sure where they fit in the whole tomboy vs. girly-girl scheme of things.

A great read about a girl with an awesome fastball. The family and friend relationships in this book were very believable, and I enjoyed the book's feminist slant. As a baseball fan, this book was particularly enjoyable to read.

What first attracted me to the book was the plot - girl loves baseball, but since there's no girls' baseball team in the town she's staying the summer at (the whole summer for the first time in her life), she must disguise herself as a boy. Now, I'm a fan of a movie involving women and baseball - my favorite movie ever being A League of Their Own. So that's one of the reasons I picked up this book. Another one being the plot, as I have mentioned above. Any girls who are interested in baseball should definitely read this, and any older fans who aren't embarrassed to be reading a children's book should as well. Loved this! Definitely worth the money!

I am a Girl Scout Leader of 8 year old girls going into 3rd grade. They all have different reading levels and we challenged them to read this wonderful book in a month. It was a little bit difficult for a few but the majority of the girls finished it on time. Some of the comments about the book we received from the girls were "exciting", "funny", "good story" and "I liked it a lot", "I loved it". The author Rachele Alpine is amazing and the girl really loved getting the chance to talk to her and ask questions about her book. This was a unique experience for the girls that they absolutely loved. My daughter loved this book and it had a few words that were challenging for her. She loved the story and enjoyed reading this book because Gabby was able to play baseball and be in a pageant. I think she was able to relate to some of the characters which made the book more enjoyable for her. The book was fun and had my daughter laughing on several pages.

A thought-provoking story for both elementary-aged girls (and even adults alike!). I read this book in preparation for Rachele's visit with our Girl Scout troop (all 17 members of which read the book in preparation for the visit). I found the story enriching, filled with fun humor, and with some twists and turns that any reader will appreciate. Love the message in the story -- the reminder to readers to always be themselves. To stand proud and make no excuse for who they are. Thank you for an inspiring story.

I just now sampled the first pages of this book and found it a beautifully written breath of fresh air with an authentic narrative voice that I know my 11- and 13-year-old granddaughters would love! I'll be recommending this author to my granddaughters and buying her books for them for birthday and Christmas presents and just because they love to read fun, entertaining well written books like these!

My daughter enjoyed reading this book with her Girl Scout troop. They are doing a special activity with the book promoted by the author for Girl Scouts.

Download to continue reading...

You Throw Like a Girl (mix) Throw Like a Girl: How to Dream Big & Believe in Yourself Throw Like a Girl: How to Dream Big and Believe in Yourself Spice Mix Recipes: Top 50 Most Delicious Spice Mix Recipes [A Seasoning Cookbook] (Recipe Top 50's Book 104) Mix Smart: Pro Audio Tips For Your Multitrack Mix (Mastering Music) BUENOS AIRES Travel Guide. What To Know Before You Go: The uncommon guidebook and insider tips for Buenos Aires, Argentina. Know Like a Local. Go Like a Local. Live Like a Local. Trick or Treat - A Halloween Suite for Clarinets: A spooky mix of 13 original and classical pieces for clarinets. Mostly below the break. Includes ... effects. For beginners who like a challenge! Human Footprint: Everything You Will Eat, Use, Wear, Buy, and Throw Out in Your Lifetime (National Geographic Kids) Know Your Onions - Graphic Design: How to Think Like a Creative, Act like a Businessman and Design Like a God A Girl Like Me (Like Us Book 2) The Unbeatable Squirrel Girl Vol. 5: Like I'm The Only Squirrel In The World (The Unbeatable Squirrel Girl (2015-)) A Girl Named Hillary: The True Story of Hillary Clinton (American Girl: A Girl Named) A Girl Named Rosa: The True Story of Rosa Parks (American Girl: A Girl Named) Why You Like the Wines You Like: Changing the way the world thinks about wine. (The New Wine Fundamentals) (Volume 1) Keep it, Gift it, Recycle it, or Throw it the F*ck Out! (Declutter and Organize!) Watch Me Throw the Ball! (An Elephant and Piggie Book) Art Of Ventriloquism: How To Throw Your Voice Free Throw: 0 (Jake Maddox Sports Stories) The American Boy's Handy Book: Build a Fort, Sail a Boat, Shoot an Arrow, Throw a Boomerang, Catch Spiders, Fish in the Ice, Camp w Million-Dollar Throw

Contact Us

DMCA

Privacy

FAQ & Help